SIR FRANCIS DRAKE

Sir Francis Drake (1545-1596) was a British explorer and privateer in the service of England. Drake led the second expedition around the world, commissioned by Queen Elizabeth I sailing the Golden Hind. The Golden Hind was only 100 ft. long yet would travel over 40,000 miles. Drake's feat was so remarkable that circumnavigating the globe again would not be accomplished for another 200 years.

While traveling up the Pacific Coast in 1579, Drake landed at what has long since been known as Drake's Cove, in Drake's Bay, on the ocean side of the Point Reyes peninsula. He claimed the land "Nova Albion" for England and the Queen.

Years of controversy came to an end on October 17, 2012 when Drake's Bay was officially designated as the Drake's Bay Historic and Archaeological District, a National Historic Landmark, officially marking it as the site of Drake's landing.
