Press Hotel in Portland, ME

Each of this new hotel's 110 guest rooms take inspiration from old-time newspaper journalism from vintage-style desks to an interior color scheme reminiscent of the color of a newspaper. (Think black and white marble accented by stained walnut.) The historic building—which housed the Portland Press Herald from 1923-2010) has oversized windows in every room, affording tons of natural light and fresh Maine

What's new: The hotel just opened in May, so it's all pretty fresh off the presses, so to speak. But the 1,100 square foot Penthouse Suite is well worth the splurge: it features a huge roof patio and views out over the Portland Harbor, Old Port District, and surrounding islands.

What not to miss: Enjoy the truly unique, locally produced artwork throughout the hotel, including a floating vintage typewriter installation and letterpress woodwork behind the check-in desk. Even the wallpaper lining the hallways is made up of Portland Press Herald headlines.
