
Forbes

Newly Renovated And Luxurious: Three Hotels To Try Now In San Francisco

By Katie Kelly Bell | August 1, 2017

ASPIRE

FORBES.COM
AUGUST 1, 2017

Three San Francisco hotel properties--Hotel Drisco, The Laurel Inn and Hotel Nikko--have been busy this past year putting the finishing touches on multi-million dollar renovation projects. Located throughout the city, from Pacific Heights to Union Square, these iconic properties have reinvented themselves in the best way with both design and tech upgrades that make the guest experience exceptional.

Hotel Drisco: An Ultra-Luxurious Refresh in Pacific Heights

This historic San Francisco property has finally completed a top to bottom restoration so intensive they closed the hotel for six months. Located in the Pacific Heights neighborhood, each of this historic Edwardian hotel's 48 guestrooms and 16 suites along with all public spaces were treated to a complete makeover. The new spaces are elegant and refined, cast in soft hues of cream, taupe and slate with custom furnishings and smart details like radiant floor heating and double-paned windows for maximum sound-proofing. Several rooms boast sweeping views of the city. Included in each room rate: a gourmet continental breakfast, an evening wine reception with local artisan cheese and charcuterie, 24-hour coffee and tea service, chauffeur service on weekday mornings, HD-streaming quality WiFi, neighborhood parking and loaner bikes. For intimate pampering in an exquisite environment, the Hotel Drisco is a winner.